

Most Pastors believe ministry should be shared. So why are so many still carrying so much of it alone?

96%

of Protestant senior Pastors agreed that laypeople sharing responsibility is a mark of church health.

41%

of Protestant senior Pastors said their church does a poor job developing new leaders.

9%

of Protestant senior Pastors strongly agreed their team is good at developing new leaders.

“He appointed twelve that they might be with him and that he might send them out to preach”

MARK 3:14 / NIV

PUTTING THIS INTO PRACTICE

WITH HIM

READ MARK 3:14

Invite someone to serve beside you.
Explain what you're doing and why.

SENT TOGETHER

READ MARK 6:7-13

Agree on a clear responsibility. Give them room to lead, with support.

BACK WITH HIM

READ MARK 6:30-31

Make time to listen afterward. Talk about what happened, and make room for rest.

Who is close enough to watch you lead, understand why, carry something real, and come back to talk about it?

Start with one faithful believer already near you. Invite them into one real part of ministry.

If we only begin forming people when the Pastor is exhausted, we started too late. But it is not too late to begin.

The same Holy Spirit that is gifting you, empowering you, teaching you is in them and calling them.

Historical research: Barna Group, 'Pastors Prefer Lay-Led Initiatives to New Church Programs But Struggle to Develop Leaders,' May 6, 2020. All three figures: survey of 508 U.S. Protestant senior Pastors, July 25-August 13, 2019. These findings concern shared responsibility and leadership development; they do not measure how much ministry a Pastor carries alone.
